Microfinance investments help improving lives and facilitate stable returns

There are investments that create a better world. Microloans give people in the Third World a chance to a better life and facilitate a stable yield for domestic investors.

Martin Cech, fund manager of ERSTE RESPONSIBLE MICROFINANCE, the only mutual fund of its kind in Austria, answered some questions.

Martin Cech

What is a microfinance investment?

The previous UN Secretary-General, Kofi Annan, put it in a nutshell: “Microfinance is not a donation. It is a way to provide low-income households with the same services that others have also access to.” Basically, our ERSTE RESPONSIBLE MICROFINANCE invests in microfinance institutes. These institutes are based on a remarkably simple idea: small, direct loans are given to people in developing countries to fight poverty. The so-called microloans facilitate the creation of small trade while at the same time securing the subsistence of the recipients of said loans. The trades involved may be tailors, potteries, tourist arts and craft, or wood-processing businesses, to name but a few. The average loan amount is EUR 4,817 (as of March 2018).

You are no credit institution. What is the connection between microloans and investment?

This is a justified question. The microfinance institutions serve as a bridge between investors and loan recipients. They are based locally in emerging and developing countries and scrutinise the circumstances of a potential micro loan recipient before a loan is granted. We do not have that sort of know-how of the small local banks. Therefore, we do not invest directly in specific projects, but indirectly via funds. Also, the administrative efforts of direct lending by the fund to thousands of microloan recipients is not practicable. That being said, as lender we sometimes do make a point of looking more closely at some projects and their effects in the various countries. I take care of this personally. Most recently, I was in Georgia and Armenia in 2012 and 2014 to have a look at several microloan clients, and I managed to obtain precious information about the business processes and their cooperation with the local microfinance institutes.

What impact does the invested capital have?

More than 500mn people have been given access to microloans via microfinance institutes ERSTE RESPONSIBLE MICROFINANCE alone reaches 15,000 loan recipients. But that is by far not enough. There are still more than a billion people worldwide who live in abject poverty. They have less than EUR 2 a day at their disposal. This makes it impossible to set up a business. Without access to loans, these people are left to their own devices. Microfinance thus provides new perspectives and prevents child labour.

Let's talk about the fund. How is ERSTE RESPONSIBLE MICROFINANCE structured? What focus does it have?

ERSTE RESPONSIBLE MICROFINANCE is a fund of funds*. The portfolio is broadly diversified: at the moment, we invest in a total of 400 different microfinance institutions and 42 fair trade institutions. Two thirds of the clients are female. The majority of loans are investment loans, while consumer loans make up only a small portion. The share of loans that have been due for 30 or more days is currently 5%. But this does not mean that these loans will actually be non-performing. We try to keep the cash reserve as small as possible. A reserve for possible pay-outs is necessary. No investment exceeds 3% of assets under management, and we invest a maximum of 10% in one country. Every country is subject to separate evaluation, and that includes its political stability.

*A fund of funds is an investment fund that does not invest its assets in individual securities but in several individual open-end funds (sub-funds or target funds).

How successful is an investment in ERSTE RESPONSIBLE MICROFINANCE? What downsides does this investment come with?

ERSTE RESPONSIBLE MICROFINANCE is a so-called alternative investment. As such, its correlation with traditional equity and bond markets is low. Therefore, it is suitable as complementary investment in an existing equity and bond portfolio. The fund has so far fulfilled this function rather well. Since the launch of the fund, it has gained 2.2%, with volatility below that of bond funds.

The lack of fungibility is a downside that has to be taken into account when investing in the fund.
