Emerging countries under pressure

Commodity prices have fallen drastically since the beginning of July. The commodity price index provided by Bloomberg has fallen by nearly 12%. In fact, many commodity prices are locked in a bear market. The index is currently almost 50% below the level of the beginning of 2011.

Over the same period the currencies of emerging countries have depreciated by about 35% vis-à-vis the US dollar, and equities have fallen by about 26%.

In line with these developments, real economic growth in the emerging countries has weakened significantly. The growth estimate for Q2 has been cut to only 2.5% q/q. Net of the Chinese economic growth, the remaining emerging economies (accounting for about two thirds) have even shrunk on aggregate. Industrial production has stagnated in the first half of the year, and both exports and export prices have fallen.

The most recent leading indicators also suggest that there is no end in sight for the downward trend. For example, the purchasing managers index for the manufacturing sector, as compiled by Markit, continued to fall in July. While at 49.1 it is currently only slightly below the threshold of 50, which indicates neither decline nor increase, the trend is headed downwards.

In our portfolios we take this development into account and have reduced emerging markets corporate bonds to zero.

N.B.: The performance scenarios listed in the key information document are based on a calculation method that is specified in an EU regulation. The future market development cannot be accurately predicted. The depicted performance scenarios merely present potential earnings, but are based on the earnings in the recent past. The actual earnings may be lower than indicated. Our analyses and conclusions are general in nature and do not take into account the individual characteristics of our investors in terms of earnings, taxation, experience and knowledge, investment objective, financial position, capacity for loss, and risk tolerance.

Please note: Past performance is not a reliable indicator of the future performance of a fund. Investments in securities entail risks in addition to the opportunities presented here. The value of units and their earnings can rise and fall. Changes in exchange rates can also have a positive or negative effect on the value of an investment. For this reason, you may receive less than your originally invested amount when you redeem your units. Persons who are interested in purchasing units in investment funds are advised to read the current fund prospectus(es) and the Information for Investors pursuant to § 21 AIFMG, especially the risk notices they contain, before making an investment decision. If the fund currency is different than the investor's home currency, changes in the relevant exchange rate can positively or negatively influence the value of the investment and the amount of the costs associated with the fund in the home currency.
